About the project

FireVall project aims to collect good practices among volunteer fire brigades across Europe. The good practices will focus on the recruitment strategies in order to counteract the decreasing trend of the willingness to become involved in a volunteer fire brigade. On the other hand good practices will also focus on the organisation and financing of volunteer fire brigades. The exchange will focus on the following relevant questions:

- How do volunteer fire brigades acquire new/enough members, motivate and maintain them?
- What is the public perception and the importance of volunteer fire brigades in the project partner countries?
- What are the legal regulations regarding volunteer brigades in the partner countries?
- How are volunteer fire brigades organized and financed?
- What is the educational framework/training/qualification behind volunteer fire brigades?

Target groups

The overall target group of FireVall project are the volunteer fire fighters and people responsible for the organisation of volunteer fire brigades. The secondary target groups of the project, not receiving a specific grant, are other volunteer fire brigades, municipal fire and rescue services in the partner countries as well as all across Europe, experts from national fire services, members of the local communities and policy makers.

Expected results

There are two types of results expected regarding FireVall project. There are target group related and public related results.

Regarding the target group the project partners expect:

- ✗ to implement the exchange of good practices in volunteer fire brigades regarding recruitment of new members, organisation and financing, mutual learning
- ✗ to create the possibility to adapt the good practices from other countries in their home country
- ✗ to extend the own cultural knowledge and understanding
- ✗ and to raise awareness of the importance of lifelong learning.

Regarding the public project partners expect to broaden awareness of the importance of volunteer fire brigades in European countries and to share knowledge about the organisation of volunteer fire brigades in different European countries.
